

I'm worried how hard the learning will be

Lots of students move up to secondary school and worry that the work will be really hard.

The nice thing about secondary school is that you have so many different lessons a week that even if you find one hard, you will find the subjects that you are really good at. Everyone finds some lessons more difficult than others and that is where the teachers make sure that all students can do the work. If extra support might need to be put in place, then a Curriculum Intervention Assistant (CIA) or a Learning Support Assistant (LSA) might support in the lesson for a period of time until everyone understands the work.

Mrs Sellars favourite subjects were PE and English, but she found Maths really difficult. We all have our own strengths and weaknesses and that is ok!
