

Can my child use technology in class to aid speed of recording?

We are very lucky at King Egbert School to have laptops in the SEN department that allow students to record long pieces of work or to do assessments on. These students are identified by the SEN department and subject teachers as being a more effective and efficient way of working.

Sometimes students would like to work on a laptop, but the teachers believe writing is quicker. We always find a way to suit the demands of the lesson and a students preferred recording style.

In addition to this, subject teachers can trial students using a laptop with department machines to see if this is a better way of working for them.
